I got familiar with this book as a rental for one of my grad classes0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Pretty good for new studentsBy Joseph EricksonI found myself teaching a cultural competence class for new therapists in the field of providing therapy to diverse clients. I found the book organized well and easy to follow. It was a good book for presenting some ideas and thoughts for new graduate level students to consider when working with people different from themselves. I found this book more a a launch point for discussion that was not racially or politically charged, and the core stuff was brought in outside of the book. As a result this book allowed for a safe start which eventually led to real difficult discussion later in class. Recommend for an introduction of a potentially highly charged discussion. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five Stars

From the Back Cover The leader in the field of multicultural counseling and therapy, upholding the highest standards of scholarship "This edition adds the latest hot button issues in the multicultural world. The authors have skillfully and sensitively added the latest evidence-based knowledge of critical problems that can surface in counseling/therapy, including 'microaggressions,' interethnic relationships, Middle Eastern issues, and immigration/refugee complexities. Everything you ever wanted to know about multicultural counseling is included in this edition. It continues to be the standard for any mental health professional treating persons from racial/ethnic minority populations....It is authoritative, illuminating, and clinically compelling." Melba Vasquez, PhD, ABPP, Independent Practice, Austin, Texas "This book is the one to read. It has invaluable information that is current, is extremely well written, and stands out from the other books in the field. The book touches the reader on multiple levels, bringing in personal stories, pushing one's thinking, and very clearly linking theory, history, policies, contemporary trends, and practice. Absolutely outstanding don't miss it!"
