From Routledge : Human Landscapes in Classical Antiquity: Environment and Culture (Leicester-Nottingham Studies in Ancient Society) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Human Landscapes in Classical Antiquity: Environment and Culture (Leicester-Nottingham Studies in Ancient Society):

Human Landscapes in Classical Antiquity shows how today's environmental and ecological concerns can help illuminate our study of the ancient world. The contributors consider how the Greeks and Romans perceived their natural world, and how their perceptions affected society.

'The editors are to be congratulated for assembling a collection of such uniform interest and excellence.' Classics Ireland 'I found this book stimulating and thought-provoking.' JACT 'This book places individuals back in environmental contexts which have become increasingly dehumanised.' Oxbow Book News 'One of the strengths of this excellent collection of papers is the range of disciplines represented by the contributors.' Landscape History 'Human Landscapes has shown how human use of and intervention in the natural environment has major social and even cultural implications for the world of classical antiquity.' The Classical 'Human Landscapes in Classical Antiquity is a marvellous book, demonstrating how there are crucial areas of the ancient experience that still await systematic exploration.' Mark Humphries, National University of Ireland About the Author John Salmon is Senior Lecturer in Ancient History at Nottingham University. Graham Shipley is Lecturer in Ancient History and Head of the Ancient History Division at the University of Leicester.
