Michelle Stigleman, Deborah Van Brunt : Wheelchairs on the Go: Accessible Fun in Florida before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Wheelchairs on the Go: Accessible Fun in Florida:

1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Great BookBy Jamie Kaylove the information, phone numbers to places, many local that I did not know were there, so look forward to trying to see as many as possible. Full of information you want to know if using a wheelchair, so no surprises on being accessible, or what is available that you may need to have in different places. I understand there are some for many of the states. Great to know if traveling somewhere new. 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. Good information By Miramar Grandmother I bought this to help find places my husband and I can go for short 2-3 day holidays. This book has a lot of information about barriers that most able-bodied people take for granted - ie, gravel walkways vs hard surface, etc. It's divided by regions so you can easily find whatever is available in any given area - for example: Horse buggy rides with lock-downs for wheelchairs, ramps into pools, accessible rental condos, fishing trips, accessible canoeing, water parks with ramps etc. This will be put to very good use this year!! No excuses now! 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Don't buy this book! By MomMom46 Seems to be quite out of date.

Highly recommended. -- Dave Hunter's Florida Newsletter, Winter 2002/2003, Ontario About the Author In 1965, on a high school football field in Richmond, Indiana, Randy Stigleman missed a tackle that altered his life forever. With a broken neck and totally paralyzed, Randy was rushed to a hospital where he hung between life and death for two weeks. The community rallied behind him with tremendous emotional support and fundraisers to help pay the staggering medical bills. At 17, he was told he would be a quadriplegic for the rest of his life. Through stubborn optimism and dogged determination, Randy beat the odds! He never lost his zest for life. After college, he married Michelle, his high school sweetheart. They share a passion that life should be lived to its fullest. As a family man, Randy has two wonderful children. Professionally, Randy is a partner in a successful health care company. Socially, Randy is the life of the party. And for fun, he has snow skied, ridden hot air balloons, flown in a glider, whitewater rafted and gone scuba diving. His real love, however, is fishing. In addition to saltwater fishing around his home in Florida, he has traveled out west and in Canada to fly fish many world-class rivers. Randy is far from the stereotype of a "disabled" person. But don't think that traveling and having fun in a wheelchair is simple. Michelle spends months planning their trips online and by phone. She seeks out details that able-bodied travelers can take for granted. How hilly is the trail to the river? Is the trail paved, mulched or natural? Are the riverbanks level? How far down to the water? Can someone help lift him aboard the boat? Is it shady enough that Randy won't overheat? The Stiglemans have also stumbled across opportunities they never dreamed possible. For instance, one summer in Colorado, they passed a "Disabled Ski School." Curious, they stopped in and discovered a premiere ski program for disabled persons with specialized equipment, classes and specially trained staff. Their only regret was not finding this opportunity years earlier. Somewhere in the Rocky Mountains, the Stiglemans realized that the many mobility-impaired visitors to their home state of Florida probably have the same difficulty. How could those visitors find Florida's gems of accessible fun? Or, for that matter, how could Florida's many mobility-impaired residents find out about the opportunities right around them? How would people know about Florida's beach wheelchairs, adaptive golf carts, swimming pools with lifts and accessible canoe expeditions through the Everglades? There was no single source for all this information. The idea of Wheelchairs on the Go was born. In 1998 Michelle teamed up with Deborah Van Brunt, who has a communications background and whose family travels frequently with the Stiglemans. They published a small access guide exclusively on Florida's Gulf Coast that sold out in less than a year. After four years of research that incorporated and expanded the information in the first book, the new state-wide Wheelchairs on the Go is the definitive guide to Florida for people using canes, walkers and wheelchairs. The book provides the practical details that the mobility impaired need. It also sends a message of encouragement to stretch one's limits and explore all that life has to offer.
