The many anecdotes were both instructive and interesting. I actually found myself wanting to continue reading and not put it down several times. I would highly

How should we respond to our aging loved ones when they act like children? Does God expect us to love them when they are demanding and want what they want now? Thrust into the role of caring for a grandmother, an aging father, and eventually in-laws, Valeri Miller experienced emotions ranging from love to anger; from isolation to social strain. As family members struggled with a loss of independence and the prison of their frail bodies, Valeri had her struggles as well. While striving to show love and care to everyone else, God was doing a much-needed work in her own heart. Who Cares? God's Path for the Caregiver is packed with spiritual truths and practical tips. Its candid message brings hope and encouragement to those caring for aging loved ones.
